Decision with Reasons

1 Toronto, Ontario
2 --- Upon commencing the Decision with Reasons on 3 Tuesday, November 25, 2008.

4 JUSTICE WEISMAN: I have heard two 5 appeals today against decisions by the respondent
6 Minister of National Revenue that Ms. Karen Jermey 7 was in insurable and pensionable employment while 8 working with the appellant dentist from the first day
9 of January 2004, to the 31st day of December 2006, a 10 period of some three years.

11 The appellant contends that 12 Ms. Jermey was an independent contractor working 13 under a contract for services during the period under 14 review and that the appellant is accordingly not 15 responsible for Canada Pension Plan contributions and 16 Employment Insurance premiums.

17 In order to resolve this key 18 question, which has been variously described in the 19 jurisprudence as fundamental, central, and key, the 20 total relationship of the parties and the combined 21 force of the whole scheme of operations must be 22 considered. To this end, the evidence in this matter
23 is to be subjected to the four-in-one test laid down 24 as guidelines by Lord Wright in Montreal City v.
25 Montreal Locomotive Works Ltd., [1947] 1 D.L.R. 161,

1 and adopted by Justice McGuigan in Wiebe Door
2 Services, which is (1986), 87 D.T.C. 5025 in the 3 Federal Court of Appeal.

4                   The four guidelines are the payer's 5 control over the worker; whether the worker or the 6 payer owns the tools that are acquired to fulfill the 7 worker's function; the worker's chance of profit; and 8 the worker's risk of loss in his or her dealings with 9 the payer.

10                   Turning first to the control
11 criterion, I find the evidence in this regard points 12 conclusively to Ms. Jerney being an employee in her 13 working relationship with Ms. Salman. The evidence 14 is clear that the doctor had the right to tell the 15 hygienist not only what to do but how to do it, and 16 that signifies that the worker was an employee. The 17 evidence is that Ms. Jerney could perform her 18 services only by written order from Dr. Salman, or on 19 her express permission such as in the case of the 20 taking of x-rays. Under the Dental Hygienist Act, the 21 doctor had the right to direct her hygienist to, 22 using her words, "concentrate on that area", and 23 again, she says, "yes, I gave her directions on 24 occasion about scaling."

25                   The jurisprudence says that when you

1 are dealing with non-standard expert workers, whose 2 supervisor does not have the expertise to tell them
3 how to do a job, it suffices if they have the power 4 to tell them what job to do. But in this case, we 5 have the unusual situation of an expert worker whose 6 payer is even more qualified than she is, and 7 therefore the doctor was in a position to tell 8 Ms. Jermey not only what to do, but how to do
9 it. That buttresses the conclusion that Ms. Jermey 10 was one an employee.

11 I also find that this particular 12 worker was not independent as to her time. She was 13 not free to come and go as she chose. She is expected 14 to honour appointments that were arranged for her by 15 the doctor. She had to give advance notice of 16 absences or vacations and otherwise, so that 17 Dr. Salman could rebook patients or find a 18 replacement hygienist. Also, she had to perform her 19 service personally, which is indicative of a 20 relationship of a contract of service. And also, she 21 was in a subordinate relationship vis-à-vis
22 Dr. Salman, which is an important consideration that 23 has been imported from the Québec Civil Code, 24 specifically article 2099, which talks about 25 employees being in a subordinate relationship as

1 opposed to an independent relation with their 2 employers.

3                   Finally, from a common sense point 4 of view, it stands to reason that while working in 5 Dr. Salman's office and treating the doctor's 6 patients that Ms. Jermey would be subject to the 7 doctor's direction and control.

8                   So far as tools are concerned, I 9 find those equally point in the direction of 10 Ms. Jermey being an employee. While she provided her 11 own smock, Dr. Salman provided everything else:
12 tools, scales, an office, a chair, floss, gloves, 13 masks, and even the little gifts given after the 14 procedure, such as toothbrushes, which were purchased 15 by the doctor. As counsel for the respondent Minister 16 indicated, the ownership of tools is an element of 17 control, on the theory that if the tools belong to 18 the doctor then she has the right to control how they 19 are to be used.

20                   So far as a chance of profit is 21 concerned, I can see no chance of profit for 22 Ms. Jermey in her working relationship with 23 Dr. Salman. The cases talk about the ability to 24 profit by sound management, and throughout these 25 proceedings I have been trying to see if there is any

1 way that Ms. Jermey could profit by sound management.

2 Well, she was paid by the hour, as 3 opposed to being on commission, and it is very 4 difficult to profit when you are paid by the hour in 5 the circumstances that Ms. Jermey was.

6 Now, I am quick to point to the case
7 of electricians and plumbers who are paid by the 8 hour, and yet they are independent contractors and 9 can profit, but their hourly rate is established by 10 taking their fixed and variable expenses and making 11 sure that their hourly rate exceeds those expenses, 12 and produces a profit. That is a far different 13 situation from what we find Ms. Jermey in. She is 14 simply getting paid by the hour, and she has no
15 business revenue or business expenses. It is true 16 that the longer the hours she worked the more money 17 she could make, but again, that is just an increase 18 in earnings. It is not profit, and the authority for 19 that proposition is a case called Hennick v. M.N.R., 20 [1995] F.C.J. No. 294, in the Federal Court of 21 Appeal. Again, if she worked quickly, she could see 22 more patients during the day, but again, that is more 23 income, not more profit.

24 And where she is required to do or 25 perform her services personally, she is not in a

1 position to profit by subcontracting out the work at 2 a lesser rate than the doctor agreed to give her and 3 keep the difference as profit.

4                   Which brings me to risk of loss.
5 With minimal expenses for membership in dental 6 hygienist associations, licence fees which include 7 insurance, coming to less than a $1,000 a year, it is 8 hard to find a risk of loss. She was even paid for 9 missed appointments during the day, and while counsel 10 for the appellant posed the hypothetical example of 11 all patients not showing up, and therefore there 12 being a wasted day and risk of loss for the 13 hygienist, the evidence is that that never occurred.
14 So you have a theoretical risk of loss, but not a 15 real risk of loss.

16                   To repeat, it might be different if 17 she worked on a commission basis as opposed to an 18 hourly rate, but that is not the fact situation 19 before me.

20                   So the risk of loss factor, or 21 criterion, also indicates that she was an employee.

22                   As far as the intention of the 23 parties is concerned, it is really not necessary for 24 me to delve into that, because the Federal Court of 25 Appeal in Royal Winnipeg Ballet v. M.N.R.,

1 2006 FCA 87 has said that the intention of the 2 parties lessens in importance as the Wiebe Door
3 four-in-one factors gain in conclusiveness. And in 4 this case, I find that all four conclusively point to 5 Ms. Jermey being an employee.

6                   Conversely, if the four-in-one 7 factors are inconclusive, that the intention of the 8 parties gains in weight and as then Chief
9 Justice Bowman says in Lang et al. v. M.N.R., 10 [2007] DTC 1754, a judge ignores intention at his or 11 her peril.

12                   But while not being obligated on the 13 facts before me to delve into the issue of intent, in 14 fairness to the appellant, and in the interest of the 15 appellant understanding why I have decided as I have, 16 I would like to address three different points with 17 reference to intention.

18                   Counsel for the appellant read an 19 oft-quoted passage from Wolf v. Canada, [2002] F.C.J.
20 No. 375, which is reproduced in Justice Bowman's 21 decision in Lang. It is to be found on page 13, at 22 paragraph 120 of the Wolf decision:

23                                    "In our day and age, when a 24                                    worker decides to keep his 25                                    freedom to come in and out of 1 a contract almost at will,

2 when the hiring person wants
3 to have no liability towards a 4 worker other than the price of 5 work and when the terms of the 6 contract and its performance
7 reflect those intentions, the 8 contract should generally be 9 characterised as a contract
10 for services."

11 The most important words from my 12 point of view in that quotation are: "when the terms 13 of the contract and its performance reflect those 14 intentions". In the case before me, it is quite clear 15 that the terms of the contract and its performance do 16 not reflect the intention that the worker was to be 17 an independent contractor.

18 It has often occurred to me in these 19 cases that from a common sense point of view I have 20 some sympathy for the appellant, for surely, surely, 21 the worker in this case, having at the same time
22 worked for another dentist and being able to compare 23 the way she was treated, surely she would come to the 24 conclusion that there was a considerable difference 25 between Dr. Appleby, who made all the usual source

1 deductions from her gross pay, namely Canada Pension
2 Plan, Unemployment Insurance and income tax deducted 3 at source, and gave her a T4 slip at the end of the 4 year, as opposed to Dr. Salman, who made no such 5 deductions. And one would think in those 6 circumstances she knew that she was being treated as 7 an independent contractor. She acquiesced in that,
8 and I would go so far that from a common sense point 9 of view, one would think that it took a certain 10 amount of effrontery on her part to nevertheless 11 claim that she was an employee, and make application 12 for a benefit under the Employment Insurance Act.

13                                   The problem with that common sense 14 point of view is that it is not the law. The law is 15 that the parties before the Court have limited 16 ability to characterize their relationship in a 17 binding way because the characterization of their 18 relationship is a matter of law, and it is a matter 19 of law rather than of agreement because it affects 20 third parties. The ways in which third parties are 21 affected is set out by the Supreme Court of Canada in 22 671122 Ontario Ltd. v. Sagaz Industries Canada Inc., 23 [2001] 2 S.C.R. 983, and I will not attempt to 24 reproduce them word for word, but they do talk about 25 it affecting vicarious liability. In other words, if

1 in law a worker is an employee, then he has the 2 ability if he is negligent to vicariously impose that 3 liability upon his employer; whereas if you have a 4 principal-and-agent relationship, an independent 5 contractor cannot so obligate his principal 6 vicariously. And it also affects various forms of 7 employment legislation, contractual rights, et 8 cetera.

9                   The third facet of intent that I
10 would like to discuss briefly is that there is a case
11 called Combined Insurance Co. of America v. M.N.R., 12 [2007] F.C.J. No. 124, which says that if one files 13 his or her income tax return on the basis of their 14 being an independent contractor, that that is a clear 15 expression of intent to be an independent 16 contractor.

17                   That is not applicable in the matter 18 before me, because the dental hygienist involved in 19 this case did not file her income tax return as a 20 business person or independent contractor. She did 21 not deduct her automobile, her professional 22 development courses or her conventions. The sole 23 deduction that we heard was for professional fees.

24                   In this matter before me, wherein 25 the issue is, was Karen Jerney an independent

1 contractor during the relevant period in her working 2 relationship with Dr. Salman, or was she employee, 3 the burden is upon the appellant to demolish the 4 assumptions as set out in the Minister's reply to the 5 appellant's notice of appeal. I have gone over the 6 assumptions, and I find that the appellant has failed 7 to demolish the assumptions, with the exemption of 8 11(o), which says "there were Other Hygienists 9 working in the Appellant's business". I have not 10 heard that that was established on the evidence.

11                                   Eleven (r) says "the Worker did not 12 provide anything". The appellant has established that 13 the worker provided her own smock. And 11 (t) says 14 "the Worker did not incur any expenses in the 15 performance of her duties", and the evidence is that 16 she incurred a few, as I have already said before, 17 there is a smock, there is licence fees, there is 18 memberships in associations, and professional 19 development courses.

20                                   Aside from that, the balance of the 21 Minister's assumptions are more than adequate to 22 support the Minister's determination, and I say that 23 because there is a case called Jencan Ltd. v. M.N.R., 24 [1977] F.C.J. No. 876 in the Federal Court of Appeal
25 that says even though some of the Minister's

1 assumptions are demolished, if the balance are 2 sufficient to support the Minister's decision, then 3 the Minister's decision can stand.

4 I have heard no new facts at the 5 trial, and I have heard nothing to indicate that the 6 Minister misapplied or misinterpreted the evidence 7 that was known, which leads me to the conclusion that 8 the Minister's decision was objectively reasonable. I
9 can find no business that Karen Jerney was in on her 10 own account. In the result, the two appeals will be 11 dismissed and the decisions of the Minister will be 12 confirmed.

13 The last thing I would like to say
14 is that I thought the submissions of counsel for the 15 Minister, Mr. Trieu, were nothing short of excellent.
16 --- Whereupon the Decision with Reasons concluded.

I HEREBY CERTIFY THAT I have, to the best of my skills and abilities, accurately transcribed the foregoing proceeding.
